

Man and nature bloom anew at Man and His World

Man and
His World 80

The marvels of Montréal and Man and His World glow again in 1980.

Very near the northeastern border of the United States lies a friendly foreign city that rivals the old charm of Europe and the modern world of New York. Its name is Montréal. Its flavor is both French and English. It is at once bustling and modern, but at the same time quietly sophisticated and historic. There is a feeling of festival and a zest for life one will sense in few other places in the world. Montréal is home to the performing arts from around the world and some of the most historic and treasured art in North America. Its deep-rooted French tradition leads naturally to a love of good food and Montréal's restaurants are world renowned and offer every variety of international cuisine. It is the island of Montréal that forms a panoramic background for Man and His World, the original Expo '67, which has been chosen for the first time in the history of North America as the site of Les Florales internationales.

Floralies 1980: the Montréal international floral exhibition.

The host to the Universal and International Exposition of 1967 (Expo '67) and to the games of the XXI Olympiad of 1976, Montréal, in 1980, will be the site of Les Florales internationales.

Approved by the International Association of Horticultural Producers and the International Bureau of Exhibitions, Les Florales internationales de Montréal will serve as the theatre for the first meeting in America of the world's major horticultural traditions.

What all this means to you as a visitor is a warm invitation to see and share the marvelous experience of the world's most beautiful botanical garden.

Île Notre-Dame, the fabulous island of Expo '67, will be transformed into a dream world of trees and flowering plants, each in the tradition of the country from which it comes.

A fresh new breeze is rejuvenating Man and His World.

Man and His World (on Île Ste-Hélène) will bloom brighter than ever to form an exciting partnership with its magnificent neighbor, Île Notre-Dame. To do justice to the surrounding splendor, seven pavilions have been totally or partially refurbished to create an educational and entertainment backdrop to the botanical garden. The opportunity for visitors is deeply rooted in the total experience of this spectacular botanical garden. It is at once a bombardment of the senses, but underlying this first impression is its power to communicate the cultures of the world, to heighten our knowledge and understanding of our ecology and the vital links that exist between man and nature. Île Ste-Hélène, plus 27 pavilions with 15 world-wide exhibitors, will enhance this great garden of delights laced with green rest areas and the opportunity to savor the stimulating and diversified experiences around you.

The rebirth of Man and His World — culture at your leisure.

Developed under the theme of "Man and Nature", the pavilions of Man and His World offer unusual cultural and artistic experiences that will rekindle your desire to learn more.

The national pavilions of Bulgaria, India, China, Venezuela, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, Italy, Portugal, Haiti and Peru are only a few of the countries who invite visitors to share the beauty of their greatest masterpieces.

Places like the Railway Pavilion, Le Pavillon de l'Insolite, a presentation of a strange, strange world; the Arts Forum, Chasse et Nature dedicated to hunting and fishing, and Le Village d'autrefois, an exhibit of yesteryear.

The variety of culinary delights spans the range from the international cuisine of Austria, Portugal and Québec to snack bars and picnic tables to meet the needs and desires of any visitor.

Shows and special entertainment form a bouquet of activities.

There are many other surprises waiting to be shared and enjoyed at Man and His World this year — some of them especially for children. For example, les Croquenotes — a truly unique band of five animal musicians. The land of adventure at the Little Prince Park has been designed especially for children. A visit here is not a passive experience, but challenging, involving and fully supervised. Shows of international stars at Place des Nations, ethnic days, folk dancing, theatrical groups, films and audio-visual presentations all add to the festivities and fire the enthusiasm for this wonderful place.
