FUL-O-PEP CATTLE-IZER. BEEF THE FEED OF TOMORROW - TODAY

Montana for centuries was the home of the Buffalo. Today the Buffalo has been replaced with High-quality Herefords. The vast outdoors of Montana is ideal for cattle grazing. Its variations in altitude, climate and terrain is conducive to producing rugged animals that are acclimated to any climate or condition. Montana Herefords roam on elevations from 1900 to 8400 feet. They graze in rugged mountains and flat plains areas. They have the stamina and capacity to survive winter storms without man-made shelter, even though the temperature can drop to  $-50^{\circ}$  below zero. Transition to spring and summer is rapid, with summer temperatures climbing to over  $100^{\circ}$  in some areas.

Montana Herefords — never pampered, never coddled — have always been bred for usefulness, bearing in mind the demands of the range man, the feeder and the housewife. Noted for their ability as feeders and foundation stock, they have been shipped to many parts of the world.

PAUL PETERSON, herdsman

Paul has lived with Herefords his entire life. He is a graduate of Montana State College and is associated with Peterson Bros., Livingston.
