This answer to your request for holiday travel information was printed on a Western Union Model 28 Teletype machine linked to an NCR 315 Computer.

Your inquiry of the NCR 315 Computer demonstrated how data can be electronically stored for ready reference and can be retrieved as needed. In many businesses today, data is read into a computer as business transactions occur. The data is then electronically sorted and combined with other related data, and stored on CRAM (Card Random Access Memory) files. In this way machines talk to machines . . . and management has up-to-the-minute information about its business at its finger-tips at all times.
